

Allied Confidential Communication

Critical business communication has to be handled by a trusted business partner.

The words employee benefits annual enrollment and invoice and statement rendering can strike fear in the hearts of CEO's, CFO's, HR managers, and purchasing managers. Not only are these processes high-profile, they can be time-intensive and hands-on. For HR managers, who dedicate an estimated 25 to 30 percent of their time to managing employee benefits, a delicate balance exists between protecting their organizations' bottom line and maintaining employee satisfaction.

To achieve both, most are challenged to:

Reduce

the time and resources devoted to benefits programs.

Ensure

they don't incur avoidable charges and costs from legal exposure, carrier premiums and liabilities.

Improve

employee experience with their benefits programs.

Explore

programs that will reduce health care and other benefits spending.

Trust

that an outsource partner understands how critical and important their performance is.

"Benefits cost American employers approximately $2 trillion yearly. Companies characteristically spend between $1,000 and $1,700 per employee, per year for HR administration alone"
